*I cannot deny the existence of stereotypes regarding “female” and “non-female” professions in our country, especially in such a historically “male industry” as the security sector. But, fortunately, we can observe a rapid departure from outdated views in society. This happens both as a result of matter-of-course evolution, when everything unnecessary and old fades out, and through a number of state and public measures designed to reduce gender inequality in our country. Raise awareness of gender imbalance and ethical concerns, Identify reasons behind the still existing inequality,

Search for counter measures, contribute ideas,

Laugh over quick witted repartee, meet congenial individuals,

Inspire female scientists, and inclusively be inspired by others.

We argue that the gender identity of the speaker is not taken into account in the structure of communicative competence. This can be the result of conflicts between a man and a woman. [...] we emphasize the need for a detailed study of the gender conflict, which opens up perspectives for new knowledge of the functioning of the Ukrainian language. We believe that the gender-conflict aspect should be introduced in the structure of communicative competence and gender-communicative competence should be formed. Yulia Kekalo, 2020

breakout sessions

discussions of various topics, small groups willingness + readiness to exchange + listen

e.g. confidence, work life balance, role model, male dominant workplace, geographical diversity

The resulting Women, Peace and Security agenda holds that women must play a meaningful role in peace negotiations, rendering settlements more durable and more conducive to justice, human security and democratic development. This is not some feminist fairy tale but is backed by large-scale quantitative studies of dozens of conflicts. In our patriarchal, deeply gendered societies, men and women play different roles and hold different status, and consequently women acquire a different understanding of needs in their community and different skills for navigating and negotiating the world around them. Almut Rochowanski 22.4.2022
